Reading Cards are simply cards which are flashed at the class, that is, shown to the class for a brief span of time. What is written on the cards should be held enough to be seen clearly by students sitting in the back row. Sometimes commercially produced reading cards are available in the market. But at the initial stage, reading cards should be prepared by the teacher himself. Learner's help may also be sought, but only at the later stage.

It has been very rightly pointed out that the "purpose of these cards is to form a bridge from the oral lessons to the first reading book. It is very important that when the pupils open their English reading books for the first time, they should at once find at least some sentences which they can read with very little difficulty. The reading cards link the reading book with the oral lessons."
